Call for Submissions

Theme: 'Legislating for tomorrow's Africa'

The Strathmore Law Review is now accepting academic legal submissions for our Volume 4, Issue 1 under the theme: 'Legislating for tomorrow's Africa'.

The call of submissions will close on the Midnight of Tuesday 14th August 2018. Submissions should be emailed to: lawreview@strathmore.edu.

Background to Volume 4, Issue 1 (2018/2019)

A pivotal aspect of any society is its law. Africa is a diverse continent with a rich history and a potential that is widely admired. While the continent's future is indeed promising, it will be ultimately determined by the steps that each State takes individually and as a collective. It is hoped that law will dictate development and facilitate societal changes. In this issue, the Strathmore Law Review (SLR) invites contributions on various aspects of law, jurisprudence and economics in African countries and regions under the theme 'Legislating for tomorrow's Africa'.

Why publish with the SLR?

- It is the only consistent high-level student law review in Kenya presently.
- It aims to promote the growth of quality African legal literature, evidenced from past themes and previous authors.
- Focus is given to the quality of the paper and not the academic credentials of the author. In fact, the SLR prides itself in its quality assurance measures such as creation of a marking rubric to ensure uniformity of mark allocation and blind review editing which curtails any biases that the editors may have.
- Quality feedback is provided on the authors' papers irrespective of whether or not their papers are selected for publication so as to help the authors improve on their skills.
