ABOUT THE COURSE

Sessional Paper No. 10 of 1965 on African Socialism and its Application to Kenya identified three 'enemies' to be eliminated through certain strategies. One of these was diseases. The delivery of high quality health services to citizen has smoldered for decades, and the Government has devised different strategies at different times over the past near six decades but all aiming at the single goal: good health for all.

Until the year 2010, health services were exclusively under the National Government, though local authorities had limited control over some health centres falling under their jurisdiction but under the watchful eye of the Ministry of Health. The Constitution of Kenya 2010 brought a radical change in the health sector by devolving all aspects of health except the health policy, which remained with the National Government. The institutionalization of County governments following the 2013 General Elections ushered in a massive task for the new County Governments with regard to health services. New devolved governments were faced with structural, policy, legislative, operational, and personnel challenges, which directly impacted on their capacity to deliver health services.

The Kenya Health Policy 2014-2030 (the Policy) seeks to streamline health services through the establishment of structures, principles and guidelines to realise the highest standard of health for the people as set out under article 43 of the Constitution of Kenya 2010. The Policy is implemented partly through the National Government's Third Medium Term Plan 2018-2022.

There are tools that both the National and County Governments have applied to assure high quality health for the people, including policy, strategic and legislative tools. But what are the key issues and challenges that the health sector faces, and are there options legislative, policy or operational options to address the challenges?

Devolution of Health Services: Policy and Legislative Options is a 5-day course that is intended to explore the health terrain in Kenya: structures, institutions, operations, legislative and policy instruments, and what is required to sustain high quality health for all, amidst manifest challenges that range from inadequate financing, structures that are not synchronized well, human resource issues, and inter-governmental relational challenges that have slowed down improvement in the provision of health services.
