ABOUT THE COURSE

The public procurement regulation in Kenya has undergone tremendous changes especially in the last 10 or so years. The changes have involved both legal and policy shifts, including enshrining public procurement issue into the Constitution of Kenya 2010.

From the era of “no regulation” spanning the period from pre-independence days to the year 2001, the public procurement regime has been transformed incrementally through the law, climaxing in its recognition in the Constitution of Kenya 2010. The year 2005 saw a major leap-forward in procurement by the enactment of the Public Procurement and Disposal Act followed by the gazettement of the Public Procurement and Disposal Regulations in 2006, which took effect on 1st January 2007, operationalizing the Act. Article 227 of the Constitution sets the policy and tenor of public procurement regulation by declaring boldly the policy guidelines and the objectives to be attained through public procurement, which accounts for about 20-30% of the gross domestic product (GDP).

In 2013, there were amendments to the 2006 Regulations in an attempt to realise the objectives of procurement by trying to reduce the bureaucracy that was believed to hinder effective procurement. This included reducing timelines for doing certain activities and doing away with some committees and establishing tender processing committee.

In accordance with the Sixth Schedule of the Constitution of Kenya 2010, Parliament enacted the Public Procurement and Asset Disposal Act, No. 33 of 2015 to align the procurement function to the Constitution and Government policies. The new law was assented to on 18th December, 2015 and took effect on 7th January 2016. The Public Procurement and Asset Disposal Regulations, 2020 (LN No. 69/2020) were gazetted on 22 April, 2020 and became effective in July 2020.
